Deakin University will use Microsoft Analytics Server 2016, which includes Microsoft Machine Learning and Spark, to analyze and provide insight on student and staff performance in the new semester. The University's Software Asset Management (SAM) Team — made up of a team of developers from across campus who are responsible for getting applications on campus up and running and ensuring they are deployed effectively — has trialled the MSSQLSERVER Analytics Server 2016 to find additional ways to analyse data to ensure that services are effective. "As a University, we are always looking for ways to analyse and interpret the data that we have, which is why we've now been trialling Microsoft Analytics Server 2016 (MASS)", said SAM Team Leader, Stuart Stephens, who has been leading the application deployment and analysis work for the last year. "We're using MASS to develop a data portal, which will provide a single access point to service logs and application data. Then, using correlation, we'll be able to highlight any trends or outliers we have in data stored in the portal and focus our efforts on the most likely issues. This will provide a more proactive way to make our services better for our students, staff and ultimately our users." Microsoft Analytics Server 2016 (MASS) provides a scalable analytics platform to collect and process data. It is a server-side technology that can be hosted as a virtual machine on the same server as the SQL Server. The launch of the MASS Analytics Server has ushered in a new era for querying data, which previously required access to a database. Now a simple call to the MASS Server will return the results of any SQL query. This is the first release of MASS Analytics Server 2016, also known as Microsoft Analytics Server 2016 (MASS) on Microsoft Azure.
